Whatever modification of this kind happened to him, was brought about by those imperceptible gradations, which take little heed of saints days or high carnival. Nevertheless, a change of seasons, by bringing about somewhat of a change in his relative situation, produced its corresponding, though not coincident result. And the situation, which the seasons now brought about, , was (but for its continual repetition) indeed remarkable. At length he stood at a point where he seemed to be endowed with two personalities; one, of a being who finished his career, and would Vol. xxv. 37 fain withdraw, gazing upon what had been; another, of a man, who had yet everything to do, and, with no time to ruminate on by-gones, must needs press forward into what shall be. Of course, the shall-be, as the more substantial of the two, gradually subdued and trampled down the had-been; but through the conflict, an old question pushed itself up, and more than ever, authoritatively demanded reply--what was the worth of that education, by the acquiring of which the past had been so completely moulded, and by whose acquisition the future was to be so materially modified To fit him for his calling A circuitous rout. To discipline his mind 1 Yet, for what purpose 1 Turn it over as he would, there was but one answer--that one rescued from the rubbish of more than two thousand years--namely, not to sit in the theater,...
