Excerpt: .you--dare you? cried the chief, raising himself, while the foam gathered upon his lips, and the veins swelled on his forehead. Dare you? My lord, replied Amrut Rao, joining his hands, abuse of a Bramhun, out of a noble mouth, is sin--unfitting to hear. Be reasonable. This is the best booty which we have seen for many a day. If we knew the total of the ashruffees we could add it, and you could sign the day-book, and clear away all the bags. It is getting late. Let it be. No, I will not sign the paper, cried Pahar Singh, petulantly. What need have I with wealth? he will not come now. I will go to Kasee, J ugunath, and Rameshwur; I will give up the world; I have committed much sin, and will have no more of it. I will--Ha, by the gods! there is a shot on the road, he continued, as the sharp ring of Gopal Singh s matchlock broke the silence without: another, and another! and a horse s neigh, too; and there were but the three. Can it be they, Maun Singh? speak! by your soul, speak: why are you silent? Let the cloud pass from your spirit, brother: it is they, sure enough. I would swear to Gopal s gun by its ring anywhere. Burn a light from the upper bastion--two; it may cheer them down the pass. Quick! cried the chief; answer their signal. O Maun Singh! if...
